The unfortunate Japanese translation that may have contributed to the dropping of atomic bombs during World War II demonstrates the need for clarity in our communication. When misinterpretation occurs, the consequences can be significant. This can affect not only ourselves, but also the most vulnerable children and young people we care for. Your strong report writing skills may just be the key to effective advocacy, better resources, stronger policy and procedures. This series ensures that your report writing will be clear, efficient and easily understood.

Skill Bite Objectives:

- To explore the essentials of report writing
- To understand the importance of knowing your audience
- To identify the benefits of effective report writing skills and their transference to alternative communication streams
- To understand the importance of your own communication methods
- To understand the real purpose of the reports you write
- To explore the use of emphasis writing, highlighting important aspects of your reports
- To identify the aspects of report writing that lend themselves to effective advocacy

Suitable Audience:

- CSO case workers / managers
- Child Protection staff
- Administration staf

Nick Grainger has a 10 year background of working with children, young people and families within the out of home care sector. Nick has considerable experience working with vulnerable and high-risk young people in residential and educational settings and is recognised for his calm and compassionate approach. Nick has a particular interest in the educating and skilling of people and has continued to work in the education sector as a facilitator and directly with schools regarding the effects of trauma. Nick also has extensive management experience in the not-for-profit sector, overseeing re-structuring of residential care, adolescent community placement and lead tenant programs.
